

A GREEN ECONOMY FOR ALL

Van Jones, Co-founder of Green For All, and currently a senior fellow at the Center For American Progress, has endorsed the proposal to build the world's first freshwater wind farm offshore from Cleveland, by contributing a statement of support on the Windustrious Cleveland web site.

"Innovative organizations like Windustrious can help create pathways to prosperity, while stopping climate catastrophe at the same time", says Van. "By harnessing the power of the wind, we can put thousands of Americans back to work."

Van is a renowned activist, political advisor and author. His visionary approach is evident in his book, "The Green Collar Economy". In it he offers solutions for simultaneously addressing the problems of poverty, global climate change and our dependence on fossil fuels, as well as the need to revive our economy.

If you would like to join Van, and other Champions on the Windustrious web site, then please email a positive comment about Cleveland establishing a wind farm out on Lake Erie, to sarah@windustrious.org . It is a public initiative that has pushed this vision for our city to become a leader in the green 21st century economy. And it is public drive and persistence which will ensure that the jobs and economic benefits that are likely to accompany our big step forward are spread throughout our community. Further in the future, hopefully, our region's revival will have its beneficial impact on communities stretching way beyond our borders, stimulating very many other areas of renewal, and hope for the future.
